Teaching, Theses and Dissertations, etc.

I have been teaching full time for approximately 31 years -- all of them at graduate level institutions. I have taught courses in most of the areas of Western philosophy both at the undergraduate and graduate level. I have also taught courses in related areas in the humanities. My record of teaching, thesis and dissertation direction, etc., can be summarized as follows:

- I. Courses taught in classical literature, philosophy, history, poetry, science, political theory, etc., at the undergraduate level in the four year Basic Program of Liberal Education at the University of Chicago.

- II. Freshman-Sophomore Courses

Introduction to Philosophy (taught in regular sections as well as large class sections of as many as 500 students), Introduction to Logic (regular and large class sections), Introduction to Ethics, Introduction to Aesthetics, Introduction to Philosophy of Science, History of Ancient Philosophy, History of Modern Philosophy. (On this level I have supervised TA and AI students teaching Introduction to Philosophy and Introduction to Logic sections.)

- III. Junior-Senior Courses

Symbolic Logic, Philosophy of Logic, Metaphysics, Theory of Knowledge, Philosophy of Language, Analytic Philosophy, Pragmatism, Existentialism, History of Ancient Philosophy, History of Medieval Philosophy, History of Modern Philosophy, History of Recent Philosophy, Plato, Aristotle, Spinoza, Hume, Kant, C.S. Pierce, Whitehead, Contemporary Ethical Theory, Philosophy of Language, Analytic Philosophy: Frege to Quine.

- IV. A. Other Teaching: I have taught a variety of readings courses, research tutorials, etc., for individual students. I have also given lectures, formal and informal, to a variety of groups, e.g., the Western Civilization program, other classes, the Undergraduate Philosophy Club, faculty groups, etc. I have also done joint teaching in courses on Wittgenstein, Kant, and Philosophy of Language. I have, on several occasions, engaged in informal research colloquia with advanced students and faculty. I have been a member of many undergraduate honors thesis committees in philosophy, and have engaged in many graduate student one-on-one research tutorials (Phil. 900) and readings courses (Phil. 600).
- B. Hall Center for the Humanities Mini-Course: Recent Philosophy: Developments Since the Mid-Century: "The Linguistic Turn and Recent Metaphilosophical Change," February 7-March 7, 1991.
